

ANGELO IS HUMBLE, ALWAYS GETS OFF

Arrested Twice for Theft,
Each Time Is Allowed to Go.

A great feeling of triumph rises in the breast of Angelo Rocco. Twice has he been arrested by the brutal Washington policemen on the charge of taking articles belonging to others without first going through the formality of requesting their permission, twice has he stood before the bar of justice, and twice has he escaped the clutches of the law.

Angelo, humble and meek, was hailed before Judge Miller yesterday by the indignant foreman of the gang of laborers now at work on St. Peter's Church, and was charged by him with having walked off with $23. The foreman claimed that he had hung his coat on a convenient fence rail while directing the force and suffered one of the greatest shocks of his life when Angelo came along.

Didn't Care for Coat.
"Your honor," said he, "this man has an absolutely unbeatable nerve. He walked up to my coat as if it hung there and after trying it on and deciding that it was too large for him, removed my purse and started to leave."

"He didn't go far though," he added, grimly.

During this stinging arraignment Angelo sat quietly in his seat with a smile of clam-like content playing over his frank and open countenance.

When he was asked about the matter he merely grinned in a non-committal manner and stated through his interpreter that he was a very nice man and that the family of Rocco had a reputation for truth and veracity that he would match against all comers. He didn't suffer from modesty.

Appears Melancholy.

When it was explained to him that this fact did not fully explain the charge against him, Angelo appeared melancholy.

Tears stood in his eyes and turning around he proceeded to abuse (if his gestures might be used as a guide) his faithful interpreter.

Finally he made a wild grab at the English language and catching it around the neck proceeded to wrestle with it.

"I da nica man," he said, "I finda da money an' I keda it so da baws he no losa it. I love da baws."

Then he turned around and shook his fist at his interpreter.

Foulitz Almost Caught; Proves Harmless Parson

Policeman Coffin Thought He Was About to Become Famous, But He Was Mistaken, and Arrests Informant Instead.

Hist! A dark mystery is in the air. Let the green lights be turned on and the voices sunk low. Dorsey Foulitz was almost found yesterday, and if it hadn't turned up that the colored person resembling him was somebody else, he (Dorsey) would now be locked up and awaiting trial.

Officer Coffin was diligently patrolling his beat yesterday while mounted upon his trusty wheel when his nervous system was severely shocked by the sound of footsteps running up behind him. Turning around he perceived the dark and genial countenance of Ely Quarles, perspiration dripping from his face, and his entire frame trembling with artificial stimulant and excitement.

"Is yo' a perlickman?" he inquired, somewhat foolishly.

Officer Coffin replied that that was what he usually passed for.

"Ah's Got a Confidence."

"Ah's got a confidence for yo'," whispered Ely. "What Ah is gwine tuh tell yo' is de greatest arrest yo' kin evah make."

Officer Coffin forgot his customary dignity. He even manifested symptoms of excitement.

"Quick, me man," he cried, "out with the secret, lest the mischief escape the clutches of the law."

"It's dis," said Ely, pointing to an aged colored man with long white whiskers and a pious air, who was making his way across the street, "see dat man. Dat is Dorsey Foulitz."

The interpreter of society's rights became really wrought up.

"DORSEY FOULTZ!" he yelled, in a voice that could be heard a block away;

What would have been the outcome had he been left to his own resources it is impossible to say. But at this stage of the case Assistant District Attorney Ralph Given came to the rescue.

Priest Is Interested.

"Your honor," said Mr. Given, "a certain Catholic father has taken a great interest in Angelo and if you will take his personal bonds to keep the peace the father will undertake to reform him."

The court consented, and Mr. Potts, the clerk, after spending several anxious minutes in catching Angelo's eye, read the formal bond to him in an irritated voice.

"quick, man, get out of my path instantly. The police have looked for that gentleman long."

Without excusing himself he sprang upon his wheel and rushed after the unconscious old negro, who had by this time gained the sidewalk and was slowly ambling down the street.

When he caught up to him he threw ceremony and discretion to the winds and, hastily dismounting, seized the elderly suspect by the arm.

"Dorsey Foulitz, I Want You."

"Dorsey Foulitz," he cried in a firm, determined voice; "disturber of the peace of the Washington police force and murderer; I want you!"

The old darky gasped.

"Say, man," he yelled, "yo' mus' be crazy in de hail. Ah ain't nevah heard of dat man yo's talkin' about. Mah name's Jeremiah Jackson Washington Lee, and heah is de eyards to prove it."

Then, to the astonishment of the officer, he drew from his pocket a number of small printed squares of pasteboard, explaining that Jeremiah Jackson Washington Lee was a minister of the gospel.

The officer released his hold abruptly, and went back to where Ely Quarles was still standing.

"You're mistaken, my man," he said, bitterly.

"You see a liah," said Ely, and then he added several other things.

"Well, I suppose I'll have to lock you up for disorderly conduct," said Officer Coffin, leading him toward the station house, "but I do wish you'd have been right about that man being Dorsey Foulitz."

The interpreter explained what Mr. Potts was saying to Angelo.

Then the clouds of grief that had gathered upon Angelo's intellectual brow vanished like magic. He became radiant. Turning around he kissed his hand to first the court and then to Mr. Potts, and then after patting Mr. Given on the head affectionately, walked lightly from the court room on the arm of his still faithful interpreter.

GLEN ECHO'S MARSHAL HAS EYE ON HIGH OFFICE, SAYS RUMOR.

The rumor comes from Glen Echo that Marshal Collins, guardian of the Conduit road and international celebrity, has his eyes higher up and that two years hence the marshal will bow to the goddess of politics and become a live issue in the sheriff's race.

This announcement is especially significant, coming at the close of the present heated political campaign in Montgomery county, it being said that the marshal was besought by many to become a candidate in the present campaign.

On the other hand, it is said that the marshal desires to add further luster to his name as marshal in order that the sailing may be all the easier two years hence.

In consequence of this burning desire to maintain the rapid pace the marshal has set for himself, the recent death of victims along the Conduit is said to be sorely troubling him. Business was never so dull as for the past two weeks. There are barely enough arrests to keep the marshal in practice.

Therefore the marshal has had to devote himself almost exclusively to politics and politics, both incidental to the present county campaign. He and Mayor Garrett have made almost daily pilgrimages to these political gatherings, where it is hinted the marshal has formed acquaintances which may be of benefit to him two years hence.

The fact that he is not a candidate at this time is attributed to his desire to stick by the town of Glen Echo until the test automobile cases go before the United States Supreme Court, in which event the marshal and his backers firmly believe that decision will be handed down sustaining the marshal, thus making his fame imperishable.

With such a record it is not believed by the Collins enthusiasts that any candidate will be found two years hence who will dare oppose the marshal in his bid to state office.

That the mayor of Glen Echo has been approached several times of late and beseeched to use his influence to get Collins into the present race cannot be denied. The marshal will be reluctant and beyond admitting that he is ambitious and hopes to climb the ladder of official fame, does not discuss his prospects so far in advance.

The Times state authoritatively, however, that Montgomery county has by no means seen her last political fight and that the one in which the marshal proposes to participate will be a record breaker for strenuousity.

DISCHARGED PRESSMEN HEARD BY STILLINGS

The ten pressmen who were discharged from the Government Printing Office several weeks ago will probably be reinstated.

Public Printer Stillings has reopened the cases at the request of Secretary Frank Morrison of the American Federation of Labor. The pressmen were called to the office after office hours and granted an interview with the Public Printer.

The pressmen were told to prepare written statements, showing in detail their previous experience, both before and since taking service with the Government.

Superintendent of Manufactures McFarland has also been requested by the Public Printer to furnish specifications bearing on the record of each of the dismissed employees, and to state the reasons, if any, why the men should not be reinstated.

It was stated by the officials of the office that the discharge was made for the purpose of reducing the force, but work has since increased in the press division to such an extent that a larger force than originally employed is necessary.

It is alleged that he made book on the races, having the other porters and bellboys, as well as a number of colored men living near Police Headquarters, as his patrons.
